

Abstract of the Disclosure

In a real-time retail display system, displays are updated with content in an interactive manner based upon current behavior of the consumers and historical trends. A network of sensors provides real-time information to the system, including a combination behavioral and demographic data. Based upon available data, the system updates the displays as a function of the content presented, demographic information, and consumer behavior.